Then the father called the second daughter and asked the same. She replied,"Father, I thought those grains were sacred. So I mixed those with other grains kept for community food service. So that everyone could have it. After this, the third daughter came. The farmer asked her about the grains. She said, "Father, I don't have those grains with me now. I need two bullocks and men to get the grains." Father was confused and asked her, "Why do you need bullocks and men to bring the
